At a congregation held at the Vatican, it was decided that the King of Sardinia should not be excommunicated—no matter what political events should supervene.

Austria has rejected the proposals of England for a settlement of the Italian question, stating that she (Austria) will abide by the arrangement of Villafranca. She will not employ force at present nor increase her army, but reserves liberty to do so in future.

Spain has demanded from Morocco a large indemnity, and free possession of all the territory she has conquered. The British Channel Fleet has proceeded to the Mediterranean; it is rumored, on account of this demand.

The Atlantic Telegraph Company propose to make an attempt to re-lay the old cable.

The London Chronicle of the 25th February says that intelligence had been received from a Vienna source to the effect that Austria had decided on renewing her old alliance with Russia. The treaty was on the point of being signed at Vienna, and was to be carried to St. Petersburg by Prince de Hesse. The treaty would provide ample concessions relative to the holy places, Jerusalem, &c., by Austria to Russia. Austria agreed also to make her policy in the Danubian Principalities conform to that of Russia. As a compensation for the concessions, Russia will guarantee to Austria her whole territory, including Hungary and Venetia, against any aggression and foreign foes.

Austria had conceded to the Jews the right to hold property.

The Paris correspondent of the London News fears that it must be too true that at a Ministerial meeting held on Friday, 24th February, presided over by Napoleon, which lasted four hours, a resolution was taken against Italian unity, on the pretext that Russia and Prussia objected to the annexation of all the Duchies to Piedmont, although that might, as alleged, be satisfactory to the Italian people. The French Government have therefore resolved that the first question—that of annexing Tuscany to Piedmont—must be abandoned, but France will have no objection to the people of Tuscany choosing the Duke of Genoa as their Sovereign.

In regard to the second question—the annexation of the Duchies of Modena and Parma—these may be annexed to Piedmont with the consent of their inhabitants.

The third question, that of Rome, is to be submitted to a Conference of the great Powers; but the idea of creating a separate Sovereignty for the Holy See, or of annexation, subject to the Sovereignty either of Tuscany or Piedmont, is not abandoned.

The London Chronicle's statement relative to a proposed treaty between Russia and Austria, is much canvassed. It is yet to be seen, but there is no doubt of the renewal of friendly relations.

The London Chronicle's statement on the authority of the Austrian Government. The Independence of Belgium is believed in. The Paris journals deny it. The Chronicle of the late date re-asserts that a treaty has been made and was on the eve of being signed, but has undergone some modification. It says that Russia will not act in Italy, but will act with her in complications arising in Hungary and the Danubian countries. The latest dispatch from Queenstown says the announcement of a treaty is without foundation, but it is true that Austria, although not bound by such a treaty, will not more oppose Russian policy in Turkey.

A Berne dispatch says that the Russian Ambassador to Sardinia had represented to Count Cavour the heavy responsibility of his Government, in that, while the other powers were endeavoring to tranquillize matters, Sardinia was doing its utmost to make them more threatening by attempting the annexation of Central Italy. In consequence of these representations and the course of France, the project of annexation has been abandoned for the present.

A note by which Napoleon required Sardinia to give up the project of the annexation of Tuscany, was dispatched the same evening, February 25th, to Turin, but in consequence of the absence of Cavour, would not be delivered before the 26th.

An official note from the French Government to the Austrian Government states that France will consent to a less radical combination than the one proposing dismemberment of the States of the Church, on condition that the principle of non-intervention shall be maintained.

A courier was about to leave Rome with the Pope's reply to M. Thouvenot's last message. The Cardinals specially convened, and unanimously decided in favor of the patrimony of the Pope, as too intimately connected with the general interests of the Church to be treated simply as a political question.

The statement of the London News, that the French Government had resolved against Italian unity, was doubted.

Napoleon's speech at the opening of the French Legislature on 1st March, says that Tuscany is to be a separate kingdom; but Parma and Modena may be "annexed" to Sardinia. France recovered possession of Savoy as a security for her frontier. The speech promises that the Emperor will make every effort to maintain peace.

Napoleon says that he rejoices at the amicable relations among European powers for a speedy peace with Coochin China, and the just chastisement of the Chinese. He expresses his astonishment at the agitation of the Catholic world, and points to his efforts on behalf of the Pope.

The French Army would be reduced to 150,000 [?] men, but for the Chinese war and the occupation of Italy.

The Emperor pronounced his speech by reference to his free-trade policy, and predicted most favorable results from it.

The speech produced a slight depression of the Bourse.

The English journals continue to protest against the annexation of Savoy. It is also condemned by the Ministry.

Lucien Bonaparte is mentioned as the King of Tuscany.

The Pope continues to threaten Victor Emmanuel with excommunication.

The vote of the people of Central Italy is to be taken for "annexation to Sardinia," or for "separate kingdom."

It was fully believed that the people of Central Italy will confirm the vote for their annexation to Piedmont.

The Paris Patrie of 5th March says that the reply of Sardinia to the proposals of Napoleon had been received. Victor Emmanuel agreed to the solution proposed by France for Romagna; but, as regards the solution of the question of Tuscany, the King of Sardinia is less distinct. The Patrie adds that it is unable to make known Sardinia's reply in reference to the annexation of Savoy.

Buoncompagni had resigned as Governor-General of Central Italy.

It was reported that John Bright would be appointed Postmaster-General, in room of Lord Eglon, whose appointment as Minister Plenipotentiary to China has been announced in the House of Commons by Lord John Russell.
